

Ithaca VC - The Grind!

Posted At : March 31, 2014 9:14 AM | Posted By : Admin

Related Categories: Careers, Community , Your Business, Clients

(Editors note: Ocassionally, we feature the Blogs and writings of local authors, Computing Center clients and others.)

Zach Shulman (the one who plays soccer) is a partner at Cayuga Venture Fund, teaches at the Johnson School of Management at Cornell, and is also the Director of Entrepreneurship@Cornell. He maintains a Blog called Ithaca VC in which he writes about business, the local world of venture capital, and startups. www.ithacavc.com Here is a Blog entry that warms the heart of anyone who owns their own business, runs an organization, or dreams about doing so!

The Grind!

The other day I was guest lecturing in a class and described running a startup to be like swimming in a Shawshank River. There is a constant flow of problems building a company, but at the end might be salvation!

A friend of mine just sent me this cartoon, which has a different take on startup life. Nothing revolutionary here, but I loved it so thought I would share. If you don't like the hamster wheel, start your own company!